EMERGENCY RESPONDER RADIO COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEM (ERRCS)

Meet AHJ Requirements with Ease

The International Code Council (ICC) and the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) have created national standards for the design and installation of Emergency Responder Radio Communications Systems (ERRCS). The federal codes empower local AHJs (Agencies Having Jurisdiction) – typically the local fire code officials and subcode officials – to regulate specific in-building radio coverage. These regulations are based on planned first responder operations within their communities. Under the enacted codes, building owners are responsible for installing and maintaining infrastructure within their buildings to meet the requirements set forth by the local AHJ.

WHAT IS AN ERRC SYSTEM?

An emergency responder radio communications system (ERRCS), also known as a first responder DAS (Distributed Antenna System), has become a mandated, in-building communications requirement for the vast majority of the country. This network extends two-way first responder communications to all internal areas of the building during emergency events. An ERRC system is comprised of bi-directional repeaters, code required battery backup units, a series of distributed antennas throughout the building, and external donor antennas to provide access to the public safety radio bands.
